Keynote address by:

(NE, 02)

In June 2015, officials from the U.S. and the Republic of Korea formally signed the renewal of their nuclear cooperation agreement, or 123 Agreement, marking the continuation of a decades-long relationship that has evolved significantly since its early days. Korea, once completely dependent upon U.S. nuclear energy technology, is now a major global nuclear vendor and exporter, and the revised 123 Agreement reflects this reality. Korea, also among the world's leaders in the development of next-generation reactor and fuel cycle technologies, is now positioned to be a more active and capable partner for the U.S., particularly in the area of advanced nuclear energy R&D.
